CSR Profile 2020

Our Awards

In recognition of its ongoing community support, Ooredoo has received the prestigious Sultan Qaboos Award for Voluntary Work. The winners were announced at a ceremony held at the Grand Millennium Hotel. In its sixth year, the award recognises companies, associations and individuals whose social development projects have the biggest positive impact on the community, and inspire a culture of volunteerism.

Ooredoo was named among the winners for the "Companies" category, thanks to a long-standing and active CSR programme that is centred around its "Goodwill" platform. Ooredoo Goodwill includes a wide range of initiatives including materials, development, training and employment, basic educational materials, providing sustainable support to communities, youth development, supporting SMEs and entrepreneurs, environmental initiatives, and supporting voluntary organisations, providing support to government organisations (NGOs), Ooredoo makes good on its promise to make people's lives better.

05 Health Infrastructures

The health infrastructure is divided into: Physical "physical" infrastructure such as laboratories, clinics, hospitals, etc. Distributed in the geography of the country in a way that makes it available to the geography of societies. Technological infrastructure like the right information and communication technology so that the entire system can all work properly.

06 Health information communication technology management

Health intelligence is concerned with capturing and using reliable and timely data and information that supports making the right decisions in a range of operations, services and resources that collectively provide health components for society.

01 management governance

Establishing public policies and development vision and directions of the health system. Management is the coordination of resources available to achieve this vision and those policies. Governance relates to a transparent system of accountability and follow-up. We at SALIK organize courses and programs, arrange meetings, workshops, meetings and lectures to discuss and analyze issues and ways to overcome them. We also organize courses, leadership training programs and management courses for health institutions.
